Dear Riccardo

Congratulations on receiving an offer to study BSocSc Politics and International Relations at the University of Manchester. In what is an extremely competitive field we were really impressed with the strength of your application.

By accepting the offer you will be joining one of the biggest and best Politics departments in the UK. We have over 40 members of academic staff who are teaching and researching at the forefront of the discipline. Our staff work at the leading edge of the subject – government assessments of the quality of our research put us among the top UK departments and our work feeds into policy debates both nationally and internationally. Our commitment to teaching is evidenced by our rating as “excellent” in the last higher Education Council for England quality assurance assessment exercise. Furthermore, we have an excellent recent record in receiving University of Manchester Teaching Excellence Award and two members of the Politics Discipline Area have won the Political Studies Association’s Sir Bernard Crick Teaching Prize for Outstanding teaching. All in all you will be studying with tutors who are both cutting-edge researchers and excellent, enthusiastic teachers who are committed to delivering the kind of quality politics education and rewarding student experience which can help you achieve your goals.

You will be joining some of the UK’s liveliest, most intellectually engaged students. The Politics and IR students at Manchester are a special group with an outstanding reputation for academic and non-academic achievement. They play an outstanding role in the peer mentoring student scheme and student societies that host a number of high profile events throughout the year that allow members to engage with formal and informal politics, in the domestic and international arena, as well as encouraging a lively social life revolving around the course, University and the city of Manchester itself.

This is an exciting time to be studying Politics and International Relations. The study of politics will give you an unparalleled understanding of many national and global events from the role of the state in the lives of individuals, to the outcome of elections; from the prospects for ending global poverty to the declaration of war. By joining us at Manchester you will be studying a discipline that has a profound impact on the lives of everyone and graduates from Manchester will play an important role in the way that the world is organised.

Please look out for an email from us in the next few weeks inviting you to attend an open day.

If you have further questions, feel free to send us an email at socialsciences@manchester.ac.uk or telephone us on +44 (0)161 275 4470/1473/2291/4748

Best wishes

Dear Mr. Scropo:

Congratulations on your admission to Georgetown's Walsh School of Foreign Service! You were selected from a pool of highly qualified applicants, and I want to commend you on your success in this very competitive process.

The School of Foreign Service (SFS) offers an interdisciplinary liberal arts education that is unique both for its focus on international affairs and for its high degree of individualization. There are many opportunities awaiting you at Georgetown and in Washington, DC.

Students at the SFS combine theory learned in the classroom with real-life experience acquired through many extra-curricular, internship, and research opportunities in DC, across the nation, and throughout the world. The SFS has close ties to Washington's embassies, federal government agencies, and businesses. By studying abroad, more than two-thirds of students complete part of their degree in another country, including on our campus in Qatar. At the SFS, you will learn not only from your professors, many of whom have led distinguished careers in diplomacy and public policy, but also from your fellow students, who hail from nearly seventy countries.

The SFS also allows for a great degree of specialization. Academic deans and professors advise and mentor students closely throughout their Georgetown careers. All first-year students are introduced to academic life through a Proseminar class, in which students work with faculty to hone analytical thinking, writing, and research skills in small classes organized across various disciplines. Through our certificate programs, students can create a personalized course of study, tailoring the curriculum to their interests. I encourage you to visit our website (bsfs.georgetown.edu), if you have not already done so, for a comprehensive look at our academic programs.

The SFS is guided by Georgetown's long tradition of academic excellence in educating the whole person and of preparing men and women for successful leadership careers in service to others. You will also have the unparalleled benefit of studying and experiencing the unique opportunities available in Washington, DC – a culturally rich and cosmopolitan city where institutions and individuals shape the future of international affairs. It is my pleasure to invite you to join us in this tradition, and I very much hope to see you this coming August.

Best wishes,

James Reardon-Anderson, Ph.D.
